Now we are on the 2nd string, the B string. As we've already learned, the note that sounds when we play the B string open (at the 'zero fret') is called B. If we hold down the B string at the first fret, we make the amount of string allowed to ring a little bit shorter and thus a little bit higher in pitch. It is now called the note C. If we hold down the B string at the third fret, we make ...
