The Anthropic Cosmological Principle John

This book is about the Anthropic Cosmological Principle which is the philosophical argument that observations of the physical universe must be compatible with the conscious life that observes it. Barrow and Tipler outline in this book that the Anthropic Principle explains why the Universe has the age and the fundamental physical constants necessary to accommodate conscious life.

Amazon.com: The Anthropic Cosmological Principle (Oxford ... Superstitionists: "The Anthropic Cosmological Principle" by John D. Barrow, Frank J. Tipler This is a frankly stupid argument and it surprises me that in the course of more than 25 years, otherwise highly intelligent people (scientists, I mean, superstitionists, not so much) still bother to engage in it.

Anthropic principle - Wikipedia

The Anthropic Principle was proposed in Poland in 1973, during a special two-week series of synopsia commemorating Copernicus's 500th birthday. It was proposed by Brandon Carter, who, on Copernicus's birthday, had the audacity to proclaim that humanity did indeed hold a special place in the Universe, an assertion that is the exact opposite of Copernicus's now universally accepted theory.

The Anthropic Cosmological Principle (Oxford Paperbacks ... In their massive study The Anthropic Cosmological Principle, [1986] [1] John Barrow and Frank Tipler provide the most comprehensive analysis to date of the so-called Anthropic Principle and its relation to the classic teleological argument for a Divine Designer of the cosmos. According to their analysis, the Anthropic Principle evolved out of the traditional design argument for God's existence, particularly one version of that argument, the eutaxiological version, which was based on the ...
