Peasants did not act as the political police had hoped when they hoarded grain in the 1924 scissors crisis and again during the 1927 war scare, or when they failed to elect politically reliable poor peasants to rural soviets. Political police reports blamed the kulaks, and this shift justified the brutal collectivization of agriculture. In this way, police reports were an extension of the Soviet leadership's divisions over whether or not to continue NEP. Why did a peaceful alternative fail ...
